Lou Ann Stories

Life is such a fantastic journey that never ceases to amaze me with surprises. It is so unbelievable that you just cannot make this stuff up.

Only days after I wrote last month's newsletter's "blog" (as the staff likes to call it), I was feeling a little blue and sad about something when a dear friend insisted that I stop by her house on my way home as she wanted to show me something. So, I stopped by her house and we were just chatting away like school girls when she finally got around to showing me an article she had pulled up on her cell phone for me to read.

At first I was thinking that I just wanted to chat and not read on a cell phone, but out of respect for her, I dutifully started to read the article at first just sort of scanning it and then as I began to really read it, tears began to fall down my face as I read.

You see only weeks before, her son, who is having some serious health issues, was having a special surprise birthday party and his friends were coming from all over the country to celebrate with him. I had mentioned to her that if any of his friends needed to stay at my house, they were certainly welcome to do so as I would be out of town. She politely declined. The day before I left, we were speaking and again, I offered. She declined again. Then, I got a call later and she said that if the offer was still good, a couple of his friends would like very much to stay in my home as they were flying all the way from California and it would save them the added travel expenses.

I was still packing and didn't have much time to set things up like I would really have liked because I was working, too. So, I hurriedly grabbed the extra soaps I had and placed fresh boxes of soap in all the places where I had soap (in the showers, by the sinks) so they would know the soap had never been used, I put extra toilet paper out so they wouldn't have to search for it, I pulled the coffee out and placed it by the coffeemaker, just the few things I could think of that might make them more comfortable in my home. Then I finished my own packing and made arrangements to get the keys and garage door openers to my friend before I left. I didn't really have any time to put anything "up" and really didn't even think much about it because these folks were my best friend's friends and if they were to take anything then they might need it more than I did. LOL! But honestly, somehow, I knew in my heart that I would get the blessing because my house would not be vacant while I was out of town and someone else was benefitting from that.

When I got back home, everything was in perfect order. You see they had left early that morning at about 7 a.m. and I arrived home about 10 a.m. so we just missed each other. When I spoke with my friend, I loved hearing the stories of what they found interesting in my home and what they could tell about my personality from my own artwork and from the choices of things I had all about and the family photos in the hall of my kids. What fun it was to hear through their eyes their personal assessment of me, though we had never met. And then...the rest of the story...

It turns out that one of my guests was a lady named Teresa Hammond who is a staff reporter for the Oakdale Leader, the Riverbank News and The Escalon Times. Who knew??? It turns out she wrote about this in her column in The Oakdale Leader which article can be found in full at Oakdaleleader.com. This is what she wrote that my friend was insisting that I read:

"Kindness still exists.

Chances are this isn't groundbreaking news for any of our readers. Yet there were two instances most recently which reminded me that people are not just kind, they are giving...

Fast forward to last weekend and a quick trip to Texas, to celebrate the 50th birthday of a longtime friend of my guy.

By quick, I mean, we flew in Friday early afternoon and home Sunday morning. Fully prepared to book a hotel room and rent a car, that's what you do when you travel, right?

Not so fast.

As my guy reached out, inquired via text the best hotels via proximity and accommodations, a somewhat unexpected offer found its way back. Apparently a friend of the birthday boy's mother was headed out of town on a cruise and wondering if we'd like to stay in her home. Each of us being open to making life as easy as possible, we replied, "that's great."

So Friday afternoon, shortly after arriving in Pasadena, Texas we were taken to the home of Lou Ann. It's important to note here, how both interested and guilty we felt as we spent more time in her home. After all, we had not met this lady. We don't even know what she looks like. What we knew was she was a dear friend to Jimmy's mom and girlfriend. Her home was located within a short distance of everyone's home and it was more than we truly needed, yet we were grateful.

Saturday, following lunch, as we began getting ready for the big birthday bash, I couldn't help but notice the little things Lou Ann had done for us (two complete strangers). Both bathrooms were stocked with soaps still in the boxes, extra toilet paper, and toiletries, coffee left out in plain sight by the coffeemaker. You name it; we had it—even an extra blow dryer left out "just in case."

That night I shared with my guy the sadness I felt in not getting to meet this incredibly gracious and thoughtful lady. I also shared the inspiration for this column—there are still good, thoughtful people in this world and how lucky are we to benefit from such.

So what's the point of this really? I guess it's quite simple; you just never know when your kindness will touch the heart of another. Both of these instances touched mine. Neither of these women doing anything other than living true to who they are and therein lies the lesson. Sometimes (most times) it's not about the big splashy check written for a non-profit or the elaborate news story highlighting a celebrity's selflessness. Kindness, grace, selflessness surround us and when we're truly present we have a unique opportunity to not just see it, but perhaps even pay it forward. Just can't get much better than that."

Sooooo, there you go—a kindness that I had offered to a friend was returned to me several times over in a very fun way to cheer my soul. It just made me bawl to read about it in her column. Who knew??? How wonderful and full of wonder to receive the blessing of reading what she wrote to the world about how a small kindness filled her with hope and joy. Little do we know how far reaching or how a small kindness can come back around to us when we least expect it. So, remember to be kind to each other, tell fun stories to each other, and bring cheer to each other because you just never can know and you never can out give God's giving. It "just can't get much better than that"!
