Lou Ann Stories

One day I was sitting at my desk at work and I received a phone call. It was a friend I had not heard from in a while whose daughter used to go to school with my daughter. She was almost breathless with laughter as she began to speak, "So when did you first get on The Ellen Show?" she asked.

I laughed and replied, "I have never been on the Ellen Show!"

She was still laughing, "Oh, yes you have! I'm watching a re-run and you are on it."

"Impossible," I replied in a voice growing more concerned and taking this a little more seriously. I was secretly thinking that something might be wrong with my friend as I had never even come close to The Ellen Show.

"Ohhhhhh, yes, it is possible," she replied in a determined voice. "It is definitely you, no question about it."

"Impossible," I replied again to convince her that she was mistaken somehow.

"Yes, it's you alright! And they even mentioned Kristen's name," she said with glee and determination to get me to admit that I knew about this.

"Anne, I don't know what you are talking about at all! It must be someone that looks like me and not me. I've never been on that show and neither has Kristen. We've been on Investigative Reports but not Ellen," I said, even now more determined to prove that this was just a misunderstanding.

"No, no, no, it's you, you were chosen for Ellen's Glamour Shots from the past and she made the audience howl with laughter over your photo," she said laughing between syllables.

"Impossi.....ohhhhh noooooo," I replied. "Ohhhh noooooo," I uttered again as I remembered my daughter had found some of my glamour shots from the early 90's about a year prior and took a couple home to keep. "Kristen did take some photos with her about a year ago...." I answered in a state of disbelief.

Anne was still laughing. I was NOT! "Yes, and she did state that you didn't know she was sending it in. Ellen even said her name on camera. I'm sure you can find it on You Tube because Ellen posts most of those ridiculously funny Glamour Shots on that sight," Anne spoke with the authority of an "I told you so and I am right" tone. "Ohhhh nooooo! And, she had the audience in stitches laughing at me? What did she say?" I asked.

"Well, maybe you should check out You-Tube," she suggested in a voice that hinted that she didn't want to hurt my feelings with what Ellen had said. After a few more how are you's and how are the kids doing's we hung up and my hands were typing as fast as I could to look up this Ellen assault.

Sure enough, I found it. There I was, big as day, in a screen behind Ellen that was likely eight feet tall. My heart skipped a beat as I swore right then and there that one day I would get even with this betrayal. My hair was HUGE and frizzed out as big as any hairdo would get. And while the make-up was heavy, the look on my face was hysterical.

And those clothes!!!! Green leather jacket, a weird big old necklace and gigantic hair, what was I thinking??? What were they thinking?? I remembered the photo was taken near the end of the day and I had agreed to do a photo shoot for their brochure along with my kids and this shot was taken with me alone, and tired from chasing the kids in a video recording studio all day for the television commercial they were recording for the photo studio, and they asked me to look tough. LOL! So I mustered my toughest bad girl look and it turned out to look more like I was either hypnotized or like a deer caught in the headlights and scared!!!! I had to admit, even if it was only to myself, that I did look funny.

Well, right there on You Tube, I listened to Ellen absolutely ROAST me on national television. It was embarrassing yet flattering all at once. Humiliating but funny all at once, too. I read the comments under my photo and one person even thought I looked like a younger Meryl Streep. Oh, I wish, I thought!

Others made comments that made fun of my hair or facial expression. It was weird to read so many comments about yourself that were either derogatory or flattering, nothing in-between. I had to chuckle to myself. I decided to phone my daughter and bust her on giving my photo away to such a public venue without my permission or knowledge. "SOOOOOOOO," I said slowly as I tried to choose the words before I spoke them, "when were you planning to tell me about the photo you sent in to The Ellen Show?"

"OMG," she fairly squealed, "She must have used it on her show if you are calling me about it.

"Yuuuup," I replied in a faked, annoyed tone as I could muster. She was giggling.

"Sorry, Mom, it was just irresistible," she replied in a voice not all that apologetic. She went on to tell me that she had sent it in months and months ago and had no idea that they had aired it. I assured her that they had and that my day was rudely interrupted by the surprise phone call and the discovery of my weird Glamour Shots photo online along with being famously insulted on national television and on the internet for all to see forever, by Ellen, as my photo was displayed behind her and eight feet tall at that. It was embarrassing but kind of flattering. I wasn't sure I would let anyone know, until I received another phone call from yet another friend about the "television appearance".

That evening, I was at rehearsal for the Junior League's Charity Ball and, I decided, I would swallow my pride and show a few folks what my daughter had done and to alert them to protect themselves and burn their Glamour Shot photos from yesteryear. They howled with delight as I showed them. Then they pulled it up on their own smart phones to show others. I had no ego left, at all, whatsoever, by this time, but we were all howling with laughter together, so it was well worth the pain.

I have that photo and video now posted on my Facebook page for all to see and I'll pull it up to show you if you come by my office. After reading this proof, Jesus was kind enough to pull it up and send it to the staff so they can show you as well. So kind of him. For your convenience here is the link he was good enough to share: <https://youtu.be/hrv9UPDn6zi> You will laugh, too.

I guess the moral of this story is never to take yourself too seriously because you never know when you just might show up on The Ellen Show and posted eight feet tall and being ROASTED!!! Life was meant to have fun. Enjoy it! Relish in the surprises! And, most of all, roll with the punches! Life may hand you surprises and when it does, make sure you can still laugh!
